I called my mom and dad for help.	My voice was squeaky, I could barely hear it. No one came to help me as I was struggling to walk toward the bedroom door. I began to shed tears that created a tiny puddle of water.
I crawled under the bedroom door to look for my parents.	The hallway was as long as a river. The brown and green striped rug reminded me of the grass in my front yard. It was going to take hours to reach my parent's bedroom.
I was so hungry that I marched into my kitchen and climbed up the wooden cupboards.	They were so smooth and slippery that I thought I was skating on ice. The cupboards were full of crunchy red apples, sweet juicy oranges, and long ripe bananas. I ate so much that my scrawny body was ready to explode.
I walked out the kitchen door.	The backyard was as enormous as a forest. I crept through each blade of grass hoping that I would be rescued. All around me were six legged creatures. Immediately, a black and white Nike sneaker walked next to me.
